Uncover Your Skills & Special Talents

A Self-Help Quiz for Adults in Career Transition

This self-help quiz can help you identify your transferable skills, marketable personal traits, and accomplishments that you didn't previously notice or fully appreciate. Ask yourself the questions below and consider how these identified skills, talents, and assets might apply to your resume and job search.

- What does your boss always count on you for, because he or she thinks you're especially good at?
- If you had to teach a bright new employee the "tricks of the trade" (i.e., how to do a great job in your line of work), what do you do special that you could teach?
- If you had to put together a training manual for the kind of work you do best, how would you describe the most important thing it takes to do the job superbly?
- When did you go above and beyond your job description, and more than earn you pay?
- What do you know so well—or do so well—that you could teach it to others?
What's the main tip you'd tell people about how to do that like a pro?
- If one of your co-workers were to brag about your skills, what would they say?
If one of your friends were to brag about you, what would they say?
- If you felt totally comfortable bragging about yourself, what would you brag about?
What are you most proud of?
- What courageous things have you done that you feel good about?
- What creative things have you done that you feel good about?
- What difficulties or barriers have you overcome to get where you are now?
- Describe something you designed, created, built, made, or fixed up that gave you a strong sense of satisfaction. Tell why you felt so good about it.
- What praise, awards, or acknowledgements did you get from your employers or customers?
- Name about 10 qualities or characteristics of other people that you most respect or admire.
Which of those qualities are also true about you?
- For each quality that's true of you, tell what you do to express that in everyday life.
- Think of a time when you worked on a project that was so interesting or fascinating (or even addictive!) that you lost track of time and kept at it way past the time you expected to work on it.
What skills were you using on that project?
- Think of a problem that came up that had other people stumped, but that you were able to resolve.
What did you do? What does that say about your abilities?
- If you suddenly had to leave the area for a while (to take care of an elderly or sick relative, for example) what would your work buddies miss about you while you were gone?
How would their jobs be tougher, or less enjoyable, when you are not there to help?

Some Thoughts on Writing a Resume

CONTENT

You can enhance your marketability by describing your qualifications using concise and coherent descriptions. In the interest of brevity, omit the pronoun “I” and use short-sentence form instead.

You may gain a psychological edge by describing what you accomplished in a given position rather than just the duties or tasks you performed. To achieve this effectively, use action verbs, words like “administered,” “conducted,” “processed,” and “reorganized.” A more complete list is included later in this guide.

A resume is a formal written document; it should not include any typos or misspelled words. Avoid abbreviations except for standard postal abbreviations for states (e.g., PA, NJ, DE) and those in organizational titles (e.g., XYZ, Inc.).

LENGTH

A one-page resume is optimum for recent, inexperienced college graduates. Although it may be preferred by some employers for all applicants, if you have experience or are contemplating a career change, you may need to use two pages to accurately and positively reflect your accomplishments.

If the resume provides potential employers with the information they need in an impressive manner, that second page will be acceptable to most of them.

- Under no circumstances, however, should your resume exceed two pages!
Leave the three-pagers to PhDs who need to cite publications and research projects.

FORMAT

You will have a decision to make before putting ink to paper: whether to write a chronological resume, to opt for the functional format, or to do a combination of both.

Chronological resumes list and describe your education, work, and some personal history in reverse time sequence. Applicants whose work history exhibits stability and growth may wish to choose this format, as may those who have worked for particularly prestigious firms or institutions and those with impressive job titles.

Functional resumes arrange information about you by experiential fields and by skills and accomplishments, often without even mentioning dates. This may be a beneficial style for career-changers, applicants with gaps in their work history, and those who have been engaged in temporary or freelance employment.

A combination style allows you to combine formats by listing your accomplishments and skills first, followed by a cursory listing of your employment history.

Regardless of which format you choose, your name, address, email address, and telephone number(s) should appear at the top of the resume. Place appropriate messages on answering machines. In addition, if you’ve had significant, recent work experience or you’ve been out of school for several years, you may wish to place the experience section before the educational information.

FUNCTIONAL RESUMES

The goal of a functional resume is to describe your experience by functional area, as the name implies.

How you go about doing this is largely dependent upon your career objective. For example, if your career objective is a generalist position in human resource management, your functional headings might be "Supervision," "Human Relations," "Communication," or "Instruction."

These headings are appropriate because they reflect the skill areas relevant to human resource management. Using the functional resume format in this way could be especially effective for someone who has skills but lacks direct experience in human resource management.

Like the chronological style, the first category on the functional resume is the Career Objective. The next category should be one in which you describe your skills and could be titled "Summary of Qualifications," "Professional Qualifications," "Professional Experience," "Related Skills," or some other similar title.

- Use action verbs to describe your skills and abilities.

Following the description of what you have achieved professionally by field rather than by individual position, you should simply list the statistics of your employment history: position, company, and location, with dates optional. Because you have already outlined your skills by areas and accomplishments, you will not be describing the duties of individual positions in this section.

Your educational background should follow your employment history. Refer to the guidelines for chronological resumes for the appropriate way to list your education.

Following education, you may want to include a category that describes extra-curricular or community activities. The final category should be references available upon request (this category is optional). Have your references' contact information on a separate sheet of paper; never list them on your resume.

Be sure to read the sample "Functional" resumes at the end of this section for formatting examples. Many good books provide detailed information about writing a resume. You may wish to consult them to supplement this guide.

CHRONOLOGICAL RESUMES

The following categories are included in a chronological resume.

Career Objective and/or a Profile or Summary

The objective delineates your professional goal. It exhibits commitment and direction to a particular field. It gives the reader a clear sense of what you want in your next job in terms of the work you want to do, the industry or setting in which you want to work, and the level of responsibility you should have.

The purpose of stating your past work history in the resume is to show that you have the skills and experience needed for the job you want now. Two closely allied fields for which you have applicable qualifications may be mentioned here, but for unrelated fields, several resumes with appropriate career objectives are advised.

Education

This category may or may not precede the section on work experience in your resume. Usually, if your most-pertinent, recent involvement has been in finishing up a degree, you will want to list it here. If, however, you have been out of school several years working in a given field, describe your work background before your education credentials.

Whereas a particular degree does not automatically entitle you to the position you want (or to any position for that matter), it is a credential necessary for certain professional fields, and extremely helpful for others. Potential employers need to know the specifics of your academic qualifications. Outline them in an easy-to-read form such as:

Cabrini University, Radnor, PA

Bachelor of Arts: English/Communication, month, year

Cumulative GPA: 3.4 (GPA only included if a 3.0 or above)

(Master's Degree GPA included if a 3.5 or above)

Other information you may wish to offer in this category includes a brief listing of pertinent or unusual coursework (as opposed to basic requirements for your degree), honors and awards, and any colleges or universities from which you received a previous degree (Associate's or Bachelor's) or from which you may have transferred.

Honors and awards will be positive indicators of your academic achievements; therefore, you may wish to set them off in their own category, either directly following the education section, or before any information you may include on your extra-curricular and community activities.

Licensure

This category follows the education section of your resume. It is utilized for fields such as Education, Nursing, Engineering, and CPR Certification and may be termed "Certification," if that is more applicable to your particular background. If it is pending, be sure to note when you are planning to sit for the associated examination, or when you expect to receive the license or certificate.

Experience

The chronological resume must give the potential employer information on where you were employed and in what capacity. In addition, it describes the nature of your work and gives a sense of general time frame. For those descriptions, you will present yourself most effectively if you use action verbs. Here is an example:

Tutor, English as a Second Language,

Chinese-American Cultural Center, Philadelphia, PA (dates)

- Instructed six students in English grammar and vocabulary
- Provided assistance in understanding American colloquial expressions within proper cultural content
- Led conversation groups and facilitated development of correct pronunciation

Remember, keep the dates general, and avoid smaller details, such as company addresses, although city and state should be offered.

Activities

List extra-curricular, volunteer activities, and community service in which you are or were involved. Anything related to your professional objective should be included first, e.g., membership in the Pennsylvania State Education Association (PSEA) for teachers. Phrase any acronyms like that, with the acronym in parentheses following the title.

Differentiate between offices held and general membership in a given organization. Use discretion when deciding when or how to list organizations that will supply potential employers with information, which is illegal for them to request, e.g., titles that may indicate your race, religion, national origin, or political affiliation.

You might want to include a list of your hobbies and interests here, or in a separate section, following activities, but leave it out if it would necessitate a second page.

Skills

Indicate special skills in which you are proficient, e.g., computer skills, Internet proficiency, fluent in French, classical pianist, vocalist.

References

Your last section should let employers know that you have acquired several letters of recommendation. This category need only read: Available upon request. Again, do not list the names of your references on your resume.

Following are examples of chronological-format resumes that provide an idea of format, wording, etc.

TYPING AND PRINTING

Be certain that your resume information is uploaded (from a Microsoft Word document) into online resume-referral sites. You can electronically forward your resume to employers and they can search for your resume online.

A resume must be neat and readable, with consistent format and abbreviations, and without typographical errors. Be sure to leave enough "white space" for employers to make notes on the page, but not so much as to use the space inefficiently.

- A usual resume margin is $\frac{3}{4}$ " to 1" all around.
- Resume should be typed and printed clearly and darkly enough to read easily.
- Use a font large enough to read, typically 10 - 12 point.
- Paper should be stationery-quality and somewhat textured, with approximately 25% cotton or linen fiber content, sometimes called "resume paper."
- It is preferable to use a white or ivory color for any field other than the creative arts.

If you decide to have your resume professionally printed, be explicit in your requirements and questions, and provide the printer with a typewritten or very neatly hand-printed copy. You may wish to have a camera-ready original offset.

PLANNING and PROOFREADING

Before sitting down to compose your own resume, read one! This guide contains several sample resumes, a sample list of action verbs, and examples of career objectives. After you have developed a rough draft, have someone else take a look.

SAMPLE CAREER OBJECTIVES

The below listed sample career objectives are intended to serve only as a guide. Use them as examples of short, concise, well-written position objectives. Don't just copy these; take the time to compose your own career objective.

Be sure that your individual objective reflects your career interests and employs correct usage of the English language. Keep in mind that your objective will change with each position. Tailor your objective to reflect the skills and attributes that you can bring to each specific position.

- A management position within a financial organization integrating my background in cost accounting and analysis of financial systems.
- A managerial position within public relations or advertising firm, utilizing my proficiency in editing, layout, and graphics.
- A secondary level teaching position in English utilizing my skills in writing, training, and coaching.
- A management position within a biochemical laboratory setting which would utilize my technical, medical, and administrative expertise.
- A case-management position in a full-service community agency requiring excellent therapeutic and supervisory skills.
- A fund-raising position in a non-profit organization which would utilize my skills in community outreach and the development of written promotional materials.
- A position as a nurse recruiter drawing on my dual background in medicine and human resources.
- Seeking new challenges in a position as communications director in a private-sector corporate environment.
- To continue my work with young people in a position as a vocational counselor in a program involved with at-risk or disadvantaged youth.
- To bring my extensive experience as a certified accountant into the administration of a large metropolitan art museum.

Dear Ms. Smith,

RE: Executive Assistant, #12-EA position advertised in the July 28 issue of The Times

As an experienced Executive Assistant who has successfully supported senior-level management personnel over an 18-year career, I have developed the skills and acquired the knowledge to ensure the highest level of competence, time management, and confidentiality.

My ongoing objective is to make my boss' job easier, and I have consistently been successful in doing just that. IT is this ability, plus commitments to quality, that make me an excellent candidate for Executive Assistant, #12-EA, currently open at Northwest Energy.

For 14 years I served as an Executive Assistant and Secretary to the Vice President of Campaign and Resource Development for the American Heart Association. Driving the fund-raising for up to $60 million, my supervisor needed—and received—efficient, effective response to up to 50 telephone calls daily, coordination of materials for and activities by loaned executives from all major U. S. businesses, and on-time delivery of up to 100 pieces of correspondence each day.

As your newest Executive, you can expect the same performance that past employers have praised:

- Loyalty and service
- Competence with intricate attention to detail
- Customer service and solid follow-through abilities
- Proficient computer and office service skills
- Time management and excellent prioritizing and organization strengths
- Extensive experience scheduling and coordinating activities, including that of other internal and external customers at all levels of managements

I look forward to discussing in greater detail with you the ways in which I can assist Northwest Energy.

I will call you next week to schedule a conversation.

Sincerely,

Jesse Lang

Dear Dr. Nash,

If you are interested in a dynamic and creative teacher with the ability to challenge and motivate students of all backgrounds and ability levels, please consider the enclosed resume for the position of high school history teacher.

My background includes a combination of business and teaching experience. As a business owner I hired, trained, and supervised many teenagers in several suburban retail businesses. As a teacher for the past six years, I have worked with a diverse population of students from middle school through college.

By combining a solid grounding in the academic material with a highly creative flair, I have been effective adapting the curriculum and modifying my teaching style to accommodate different ability and interest levels. I have been successful with behaviorally challenged students as well as with academically serious students, and those in between.

I am committed to creating a safe leaning environment that encourages young people to share ideas, think creatively, take risks, and make rational choices. I would welcome the opportunity to apply my commitment and my skills to benefit the Anytown Public Schools and look forward to speaking with you. You can contact me at 555-555-5555.

Thank you for your consideration.

Sincerely,

Norma Samuels

Dear Mr. Stevens,

Although I have established a successful career as a General Manager with a hotel industry leader, my goal now is to transition my general management experience and technical skills into new, professional roles within the IT arena. To that end, I am confidentially investigating employment opportunities with progressive technology companies and have enclosed my resume, which will provide you with a summation of my credentials.

As a General Manager, I am routinely faced with challenges involving the need to evaluate, upgrade, and implement technologies that will improve our level of operations and provide greater efficiency. This is where I have excelled.

My technical proficiency led to expanding my managerial responsibilities to include serving as an “on-site ID application specialist.” In this capacity, I have gained significant experience in areas such as systems integration, hardware /software analysis, network modeling, reengineering service applications, and systems life cycle management. My success in developing and delivering cost-effective solutions for performance-driven operations yielded notable results in enhancing P&L efficiency and annexing corporate goals.

Besides my unique blend of technical and general management experience, I offer your company an excellent record of peak performance, significant achievements, and decisive leadership, in addition to a strong academic and management training background. As a proactive thinker with a vision toward future challenges, the unprecedented rate of change in Information Technology serves as a catalyst in my pursuit of greater opportunities within this environment.

I appreciate your time and consideration. I will contact your office next week to follow up on scheduling a time for us to meet.

Sincerely,

Douglas Morganstern
